

Cricket Control

Chirping happens! This rainy season will be bringing Crickets with it, and soon you'll be hearing their song from afar! Male crickets produce these chirping sounds, using their hidden, membranous wings, which lie below a pair of protective, leathery pair of forewings. These chirps are registered by highly sensitive organs found on a cricket's forelegs.

There are approximately 2,400 different species of crickets, worldwide, varying in colors and sizes, and habitat! Some crickets are pale, and live in the trees of the tropics, others live in bushes; Some species will grow up to 2" long! Luckily, our common Arizonian crickets tend to be smaller in size-typically, we encounter the House Cricket, or Field Cricket.

These small pests enjoy burrowing in dirt, typically in gardens where they may feed on plants and cause damage to gardens. Crickets will find ways into your home, thriving on commercial pet food, and finding safety in the dark, cool, crevices.

FUN FACT!

Did you know in the rural Kampong Thom Province of Cambodia, crickets are a delicacy?! They are served as a deep-fried snack and are thought to improve health and longevity!
